Lauren Luloff's Bushwick studio is vast by New York standards, but its atmosphere is as delicate as the artist who creates there. Luloff's work, bleach-treated bed sheets and textiles mounted on wooden stretchers—debatable whether they should be called paintings or sculpture, calling to my mind the abstract paintings of Dona Nelson—are intimate, poignant, and stayed with me weeks after I saw them.

“Lauren Luloff—Heliotrope” will be at Halsey McKay Gallery at 79 Newtown Lane, East Hampton through July 14, 2014.
